AXLE BURNS; FLIER WRECKED

Wabash Crack Train Wrecked Near Orland

No. 12, one of the crack through trains of the Wabash railroad, was wrecked near Orland early Tuesday morning when an axle on one of the cars burned off, causing the derailing of two of the passenger cars.

The train was going at a good rate of speed when the accident occurred. The rest of the train remained on the track. Rails and ties were torn up for some distance. The passengers, including members of the New York American League team, were shaken up. No one was hurt.

The passengers took a suburban train from Orland to Chicago.

Traffic was tied up on the south end of the road from Orland for about half a day. The News-Bulletin is showing a picture herewith thru the courtesy of the Chicago Tribune, of the wreck.

The wrecked train came from the south and was bound for Chicago.

MOKENA BOYS FIND NEW WAY TO SPEND CHAVARI MONEY

The young men of Mokena have made a radical departure from the time honored custom of having a big time at the expense of newly wedded couples. Recently these young men serendiped Emil Mau and his bride, but instead of spending the money they received from the new groom, in drinks or eats, they took this money and bought two sensible gifts in the form of a beautiful lamp and a still more beautiful floor lamp. They presented these gifts of their thoughtfulness to the much surprised couple a few nights later. This fine stunt is worthy of emulation by future chavari parties.

LOSES CONTROL OF CAR AND COLLIDES WITH BUILDING

While Mrs. McMahn, wife of the Mokena physician was driving her car on the Lincoln Highway Monday afternoon the car got beyond her control and crashed into the soft drink stand of Mose Gamble at the four corners north of Frankfort. The car was quite badly damaged and was towed into Mokena by Cooper & Hostert to their garage. No one was injured. The soft drink stand was slightly damaged.

SELF RELIANCE

is an asset of every successful man in the business world to-day. Some men are born with a lot of self-reliance, and other men have had to cultivate it.

One of the easiest and surest ways of becoming self-reliant is to start NOW, and save a certain amount every week, or month, till you have a tidy sum in the bank.

The possession of a bank account will give you more confidence in yourself than you ever had before, and you will be better equipped to meet your everyday problems.

PAUL ROESNER OF MOKENA WEDS NEW YORK CITY GIRL

A pretty wedding took place at the Immanuel Lutheran church last Sunday morning when Paul Roesner of Mokena and Miss Dora Reimers, the latter of New York City were united in marriage, the wedding taking place at the close of the morning service. The groom's father, Rev. Roesner performed the ceremony. The bride was attired in a gray georgette and carried a bouquet of bride roses. She was accompanied by her bridesmaids, Miss Clara Roesner, who was attired in tan crepe de chene and carried red roses. The groom was attended by Herman Bornet. The bride's mother and sister came from New York to attend the wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Roesner will make their home with the groom's parents for the time being.

MOKENA VOL. FIRE DEPT. GIVE BENEFIT PICNIC, JULY 22

The Mokena Vol. Fire Dept. is going to have a benefit dance at the Mokena Men's Club Pavilion on Sunday July 22nd. There will be dancing in the afternoon and evening. As a special feature the Sunflower colored quartette will sing. The Formito 6 piece orchestra will furnish the music. Come and hear the colorful boys rag it.

JOE KOLBER TO BUILD NEW BUNGALOW AT MOKENA

Joseph Kolber, former Mokena resident, but now of Chicago, has purchased a lot from Conrad Schenkel in the west end of the village this week and expects to start the construction of a fine modern new brick bungalow. Mr. Kolber says the new home is to be of the very latest design and will be up to date in every way. J. G. Oswald and Geo. J. Hacker, Mokena contractors are to build the new home. The purchase of the lot was consummated this week, the consideration being $500.00.

LOUIS STEINHAGEN INJURED AT MOKENA BOWMAN PLANT

While Harold Cooper and Louis Steinhagen were carrying a cream separator up stairs at the Bowman Dairy plant in Mokena Tuesday afternoon the machine slipped from the grasp of Mr. Cooper and fell on Mr. Steinhagen wrenching his back. He was hurried to the Silver Cross hospital at Joliet at once where an x ray was taken to see if any bones were broken, but none were broken. He is getting along nicely.

THIS ISSUE CONTAINS REAL ESTATE AND PERSONAL PROPERTY ASSESSMENT LISTS

This week The News-Bulletin carries the complete real estate and personal property assessment lists of the towns of Frankfort and Homer, the New Lenox lists being published last week. All the tax payers should read these lists as these lists are important. The real estate assessment lists are published once in four years.

STARTS FIRE WITH GASOLINE AND IS BADLY BURNED

Early Monday morning August Hentsch, Mokena city father went to fire up the steam roller used in street reconstruction here. He thought there was no fire in the firebox as the engine had not been used since Saturday. After putting in the kindling he threw some gasoline on top of it. A few live coals were still in the engine firebox and the gasoline exploded. The burning fluid was thrown in Mr. Hentsch's face and on his hands and arms. He was very badly burned. Dr. McMahn was called and dressed the burns. Mr. Hentsch was able to be about the same day but will not forget his experience with gasoline very soon.

MOKENA WITHOUT WATER WHEN MOTOR BURNS OUT

The village water department was shut down for several hours Monday when the large motor used in driving the pump was burned out. Low voltage is said to have been the cause. An oil switch was installed at the cost of $60 sometime ago as a precaution against low voltage, but it failed to work. The burned motor will have to be rewired which will mean an expense to the village of $200 to $300. This is the third motor which has burned out in the water department as the result of low voltage. Another motor has been installed temporarily so the water supply is at normal again.

Mokena Woman taken ill on Visit

Mrs. E. P. Krapp who was taken ill with bronchial pneumonia while visiting in Chicago with her sister, Mrs. Hugo Stammer, is much improved.

The Supreme Motive Defined

The supreme motive of the Mokena M. E. church phrased in the words of Charles Wesley is "To serve the present day." It believes that to be the only justification for its existence in the community. Toward the fulfilling of this mission it is ministering to the life of youth through the Sunday School. Every Sunday at 10:15 a. m., an effective, modern program of worship and instruction is conducted for the children. The attendance and spirit of the school has been very commendable. All children are invited to attend.

The evening hour beginning at 7:45 p. m., is one of Christian Fellowship. It is an enjoyable and profitable way in which to close the Lord's Day. Both friends and strangers are most cordially invited to attend. A warm welcome is extended to all.

The pastor will announce his subject each week in the News-Bulletin.

FRANKFORT CHURCH GETS NEW ESTE PIPE ORGAN

The new Este pipe organ for the St. Peter's Evangelical church at Frankfort has arrived and is being installed. Special dedication services will be held when the organ is installed.

Orland News

Miss Adelaide Gee from Minnesota is visiting her relatives in Illinois. The Sunday School picnic of the Orland M. E. church was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Myrick on July the 4th. A delicious pot luck dinner was served at noon. The afternoon was spent in games and races. The main feature of the afternoon was a "Treasure Box Hunt". Everyone had a good time in spite of the rain.

The vacation Bible School started Monday July 9th at 8:30.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cooper and Pearl Cooper visited Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Beagley on Thursday evening, July the 5th.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Burgess, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sayers visited Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Beagley, Sunday afternoon July the 8th.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sayers have purchased a new four door Ford Sedan from Elmer Cooper.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Kay and children Ruth, Cyril and Harold spent the Fourth in Tinley Park at the late picnic.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Reich and family and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Yunker motored to Plainfield Wednesday.

Mr. Walter Schusseler and Miss Luella Schrader motored to Plainfield to see the horse races.

Mr. and Mrs. Gebhardt Koehler were in Marley Wednesday.

Mr. Fred Loeb purchased a fine new Haynes coupe.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Arnold Jr. and daughter Ruth spent Wednesday at the Pau home in Chicago.

Mr. Goodaul of St. Louis stopped at the Thomas Wheeler home Thursday evening on his way home from from Detroit Michigan.

Mr. Thomas Wheeler returned to Decatur Illinois Sunday where he is employed as dispatcher for the Wabash R. R.

Mr. and Mrs. William Kruspe of Chicago spent the week end at the former's parents Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kruspe.

Miss Adell Schmadeke resigned her position as telephone operator. Since her resignation a number of changes have taken place. Miss Sarah Kruspe is now manager, and Miss Florence Bettenhausen relief operator. Miss Rose Endres is night operator.

Mrs. Ada Humphrey has been entertaining relatives from Chicago.

Commander Auto And Force Owner To Start the Car

Earl Mills of Chicago had an exciting time at Frankfort Monday night. He had taken Miss Erma Fink out for a ride and upon taking her home he got out of his car and walked to the house. While they were talking Miss Fink saw a crowd of men about his car and called Mr. Mill's attention to the fact. He went over to the car and asked what was up whereupon one of the men pulled a sawed off shot gun and told him to get the car started. He said they had to get out of Frankfort quick. Mr. Mills got the car started and the men piled in and drove off toward Chicago Heights on the Lincoln way.

The alarm was spread right away in Frankfort. Frank Schau and Nick Bennett at once jumped into a car and drove after the fleeing youths. They passed them and in attempting to cross over the highway in front of them they went into the ditch themselves and had to be pulled out by passing motorists. They took up the chase again and passed the youths again while near Matteson. They succeeded in getting their car across the road so that the fleeing men had to stop. By the time Mr. Schau and Mr. Bennett together with police who had come from Chicago Heights in their flivvers could get up to the car the men had disappeared in an adjoining field and made their escape. No trace has been found of them. Mr. Mills was lucky enough to get his car back. Just why the youths were in such a hurry to get away from Frankfort has never been learned.

FATHER PASCHAL FORMER MOKENA PRIEST IS DEAD

The John Frisch family received a letter the forepart of the week telling of the death of Father Paschal on Sunday, July 8th at Sioux City, Iowa. Father Paschal will be well remembered by Mokena people, having served the local parish of the St. Mary Catholic church for two years. He also served the Catholic chapel at Oak Forest. He was in charge of the Mokena parish when it celebrated its 50th anniversary 8 years ago. While at Sioux City he had charge of the Catholic orphanage there. He was sixty years old. He was buried at Sioux City.

PARROT ALMOST TOO CLEVER

Possibility That Indiana Bird May Lose a Little, if Not All, of Its Popularity.

Mr. and Mrs. Watt Irvin, of Kokomo, have a parrot which is interesting. Reuben easily fits into the Irvin family circle in the evening, injecting remarks occasionally and at times seeming to ponder. He has made life a burden to some of the neighborhood boys whose mothers call them from play to obnoxious tasks. So cleverly does he imitate the voices of the mothers that the little chaps are deceived.

The Irvins noticed Reuben hanging by his feet from the top of the cage and going through other exercises soon after they bought him.

"Look, Reuben's doing stunts!" Mrs. Irvin exclaimed.

"Stunts!" yelled the bird. Ever after that when he began the performance he always prefaced it with the word. The Irvins had been out one Sunday afternoon and had come back to the house with visitors, to show the parrot. When they got ready to leave to escort the visitors out of town Reuben, noticing the preparation, exclaimed, "What, going away again?"—Indianapolis News.

Sleeveless Frocks; Freckles.

Sleeveless gowns, now so stylish and popular during the heat waves, represent the well-known swing of the pendulum in women's styles, according to a masculine dress expert, says the New York Sun and Globe. At the other end of the arc of changes are the summer furs. The main inconsistency the fair sex is guilty of is that they retain their fox and wolf skins during the warm spells.

While the fashion authority adds to the heat they afford little protection from "Old Sol" and there will be more sun-burned arms this year than ever before in the history of the country. But sun-burned arms do not concern their fair owners. In fact they're proud of them. It's the freckles that appear with most sunburns that worry the modern sleeveless frock wearer. Few women point with pride to their freckles.

When Watch-Springs Break.

The spontaneous breaking of watch-springs is believed to occur chiefly in the summer months. From the repair records of two firms for several years it is found that the breakages are most numerous during the season of frequent thunderstorms. Further experiments indicate that it is moisture instead of heat that plays the chief part. It is suggested that the springs may be weakened by rusting spots, and in 56 samples, sealed up in equal division in a jar containing moist air, and one containing dry air, 17 springs broke, all in the jar of moist air. The liability to break was greatly reduced by the application of oil.

How Could She Know?

Senator La Follette was holding a hearing at Washington the last term to learn if possible why the farmers had to pay so much for gasoline. He seemed to be in fine fettle and uttered a lot of facetious little asides as the testimony came out. After one he considered particularly good he turned to the stenographer and said: "Of course, you will not put those little jokes of mine in the record?"

"But, senator," inquired the pothook hound, "how am I to know which the jokes are?"

Relieved of Army Service.

The work of demoting and discharging 1,858 American army officers has been completed by the War department. The elimination included 23 colonels, 39 lieutenant colonels, 110 majors, 345 captains and 201 first lieutenants from promotion list branches of the army, and 101 officers from the medical corps, 64 from the dental corps and 23 from the veterinary corps, 56 from the medical administration corps and 41 from the chaplains' corps.

Well, We Couldn't Do Any Better.

The Sunday school lesson was the seventy-third Psalm, and the teacher read the passage: "I saw the prosperity of the wicked. For there are no hands in their death." Turning to one little fellow she asked him what he thought this meant.

"Why, teacher," he replied, "I guess it means that wicked men mustn't have military funerals."—Boston Transcript.

KEELER, AT 80, GOES TO WORK

After fourteen years of enforced idleness because of ill health, J. H. Keeler, widely-known Maryland citizen, has gained forty pounds at the age of eighty years and gone back to work every day. Mr. Keeler, who resides at 3706 Thirty-Second St., Mt. Ranier, Md., gives entire credit for his extraordinary rehabilitation to Tanlac.

"My stomach was in such terrible condition I could hardly digest a thing," says Mr. Keeler. "It would swell to nearly twice its normal size and I would have frightful pains through my stomach and back. I felt so weak, dizzy and miserable work was out of the question. In fact, my friends gave me up on three or four occasions."

"Five months ago I began taking Tanlac and improved from the very first bottle. I now eat anything on the table, have gained forty pounds, and am back at work every day. Actually, I feel like a boy again. It would be ungrateful of me not to praise Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

Tanlac Vegetable Pills are Nature's own remedy for constipation. For sale everywhere.—Advertisement.

Tourist Travel

Registration of motorists visiting the national parks in 1922 shows that there is an average of 3.45 persons per car. As some of the vehicles are roadsters which permit of only two passengers, it appears that the average automobile on tour carries close to a capacity load.

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.

DUG WEALTH FROM HIGHWAY

Debris Containing Platinum, That Had Been Used for Road Building, Recovered in Germany.

Gelhausen, a sleepy town in a quiet German valley, has become a veritable treasure chest. Some time ago a large electric light bulb factory there was burned down. The ruins of the buildings were used to build roads.

In the course of time the price of platinum, a constituent used in the manufacture of the bulbs, rose beyond the dreams of avarice. It then occurred to someone to dig in the roads for specks of the precious metal which might have been melted by the fire and left in the ruins.

Presently the roadway was full of diggers, some of whom earned as much as $8,000 marks a day by selling the platinum specks they unearthed.

The owners of the bulb factory tore down the new building they had erected, and, by searching in the ruins of the old, found enough platinum to pay a handsome profit in addition.

Question of Environment.

Some years ago while building a new edifice in our little city church service was held in the "opera house." One Sunday evening a visiting woman sang a beautiful solo. Forgetting that I was in church, and remembering only that I was in the opera house, I applauded vigorously. Of course I was the only one who showed such appreciation, and I have not yet forgotten how embarrassed I was.—Exchange.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

RAIN AND WIND

"Hello," said the King of the Clouds to Mr. Wind.

"Hello," said Mr. Wind, and he whistled a great long whistle. Then he blew and he shouted:

"I'm Mr. Wind and I'm wild today. I'm full of pranks. I'm full of play. I don't care what the people say. I am going to have a time so gay."

The King of the Clouds laughed, for the Wind was certainly full of energy and good spirits. He seemed almost beside himself with joy. Oh, how hard he was blowing. Everything seemed to be blown about that he touched. Even the ears of dogs flapped in the wind, though they did stay attached to their owners' heads! And the people were either blown about when they were out or had to keep their windows down indoors or all their things would be blown about. Yet it was quite hot and really a day which would be called a muggy day.

They really wanted to open their windows wide so they could have the air. But if they opened them more than a crack the papers began to blow and the curtains blew so that they looked as though they would come down, and the ornaments looked as though they would smash down and break.

"It has been warm lately," said the King of the Clouds, "and people have said how things have grown. People who have been in cities all through the week and who have gone out on Saturdays and Sundays have said as they have looked at the flowers and the shrubs and the trees and the leaves, 'Oh, how they have grown.'"

"Yes, they have spoken of the flowers just as though they were children, for you know how people will say to children, 'How you have grown.'"

"And the people have even said to the flowers, 'Why, last week you were nothing but a little bud, and here you are all out.'"

"In just the very same way that people will say to a child, 'Why, my dear, you seemed only a baby so short a time ago, and here you are grown up almost!'"

"And the flowers have said that of course they have grown just as children grow, and that it really is very silly to seem so surprised about it. But the flowers have said that people didn't say these things to them in a patronizing way, as they often did to children, which made it all right."

"And some people have said that they could actually see the flowers growing—opening before their very eyes."

The Wind kept blowing and blowing and pretty soon the King of the Clouds spoke again.

"Mr. Wind, wouldn't you like me to join you? The people are all saying that it is looking 'overcast' and as though it might rain. And here I am all ready for a good frolic. I am eager for fun."

"Even the Ears of Dogs Flapped."

"Join me, join me by all means," said Mr. Wind.

So the King of the Clouds joined Mr. Wind and Mr. Wind blew and the King of the Clouds called forth all the Army of Raindrops and what a time they had.

They chased over the pavements and the roads and the sidewalks—Mr. Wind after them! They ran races. They had so beautiful a time.

"Well, well," laughed the King of the Clouds, "I did hear such a funny thing just now. Someone opened a window and poked her head out for a second and then she said, 'Oh, mercy, it is raining to beat the band.'"

"Now that is a joke! I may beat down upon pavements and the roads and the sidewalks but I don't beat the band. I wouldn't know how to beat a drum, nor would I know how to play an instrument and so make music. Fancy the King of the Clouds playing a saxophone or a cornet! What funny expressions people use."

And then the King of the Clouds and Mr. Wind raced and chased even more and oh, such a wind and rain storm as it was.

The people who were indoors shook their heads and said, "Impossible to go out on a day like this." And the ones who were already out-of-doors got soaked-drenched right through all their clothes.

LESSON FOR JULY 15

SIMON PETER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 16:13-18; John 21:15-7.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee."—John 21:17.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—John 1:35-42; John 18:10-11; 20:1-10; 21:1-23; Acts 2:1-5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter, the Helper of Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Leader of the Twelve.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Peter's Failures and Successes.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Peter's Weaknesses and Strength.

I. His Name. (John 1:42).

The name which he bore when introduced to Christ was Simon, which means "hearing." But Jesus gave him a new name—"Peter," which means "rock." This showed what he was to become.

II. His Call. (John 1:41, 42).

His brother Andrew brought him to Christ. This brought him into fellowship with the Lord. From ordinary discipleship he was called to special ministry (Luke 5:10). From being a fisherman he was called to catch men.

III. Peter's Character.

1. Sincere. What Peter was at heart could be read on his face. He was free from duplicity. People could understand him. Because of this characteristic they could tell when he was lying. Yet even when people knew he was in error they could believe in him. He seems to have been ignorant of the word "diplomacy."

2. Prompt. He had the ability to decide and act quickly, as the occasion demanded. This made him a real leader. His action at the empty tomb was an example of his promptitude. John outran Peter, but Peter was the first to enter the tomb. When Cornelius sent for him at Joppa he responded without delay.

3. Courageous. While Peter played the coward sometimes, he was for the most part a brave man. No doubt it was through cowardice that he denied the Lord, but it was his courage that brought him to follow the Lord into the palace of the high priest.

4. Intense. He felt keenly and acted with vigor. Whether right or wrong, what he did he did with all his might. When he preached it was with passion. No finer example of burning eloquence can be found than his Pentecostal sermon.

IV. Peter's Confession of Christ (Matt. 16:13-18, 21-28).

The disciples had been with the Lord for several years. They had heard His mighty words and seen His mighty works. Various opinions were extant about Him. It was now necessary for them to have a definite conception of Him. The Master-Teacher knew the necessity of having the disciples get the right conception of Himself.

1. What It Was (v. 16). It involved His Messiahship—"The Christ," and deity—"Son of the living God." This is the burning question today. Those who have the right conception of Christ's person and mission have no trouble in the realms of science, philosophy or ethics.

2. Christ's Commendation (v. 17). He pronounced him blessed. Truly he was blessed, for he both possessed and confessed the Christ. The evidence that Peter was blessed was that he was in spiritual touch with the Father in Heaven.

3. Peter's Blessing (v. 18). Christ declared that he should be the foundation stone in His church. Christ is the chief cornerstone on which the church is built. Christ's person and Messiahship was confessed by Peter, and on this rock is laid the foundation of apostles and prophets (Eph. 2:20). All believers are living stones of this house (1 Peter 2:5).

V. Peter's Restoration (John 21:15-17).

Peter grievously sinned in denying the Lord, but he made a confession, shedding bitter tears of penitence over his sin and folly. The Lord tenderly dealt with His erring disciple and restored him. In this restoration He brought to Peter's mind the essential qualification for his ministry. Love is the pre-eminent gift for Christ's service. To impress this upon him, he three times asked the question, "Lovest thou me?" Three classes of people were to be served: (1) Those beginning the Christian life—"Feed my lambs." (2) The mature Christians—"Shepherd my sheep." The shepherd needs to protect and feed the sheep. Love is the one essential equipment for this service. (3) The aged Christians—"Feed my sheep." Love is needed in dealing with the fathers and mothers in Israel.

Injuries.

Rather wink at small injuries than to be too forward to avenge them. He that to destroy a single bee should throw down the hive, instead of one enemy, would make a thousand.

Trust in the Lord.

Trust in the Lord and do good: so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.—Ps. 37:3.

The Student.

Don't despair of a student if he has one clear idea.—Emmons.

A Citizen of Every Town

THE Public Service Company is a citizen of each town it serves. The company, like other good citizens, pays taxes, feels a civic pride in the prosperity of each community and responsibility to help each community become a bigger and better place in which to live or work.

The company is constantly extending its facilities and keeping pace with local development so that a continuously larger number of residents may be served and the community itself made more attractive to outsiders.

The company occupies 112 buildings variously located throughout the territory. The lines of the company would stretch across the continent from New York to San Francisco. An automobile fleet of 220 vehicles, ranging from heavy duty trucks to light runabouts, is in constant service carrying those who tend the lines and rendering service to customers.

Residents of small communities who formerly had but five or six hours uncertain electric service in the evening are now enjoying 24 hour service, in the same measure as residents of the large cities.

The Public Service Company furnishes services of a nature so essential to the agricultural, industrial and commercial development of the territory in which it operates that the prosperity and future growth of Northern Illinois and the Company are largely interdependent.

This company has but one purpose and that is, to give continuously good service at the lowest practicable cost.

PALOS PARK NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. F. Yunker and family and Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Robeson attended a reunion at the Lyons Township Wednesday July 4 at the home of Mrs. Stella Mollen. About 200 people were present and mostly all near or distant relatives. A dinner was served on the lawn under a canvas covering and a cafeteria supper was served in the evening. Everyone had a good time.

The choir of the St. Johns Lutheran church of La Grange, Illinois had an outing to the Forest Preserve at Palos Park Sunday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pautke and family were among the group. Mrs. Pautke being the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Robeson of Palos.

Mrs. De Nova thought last week that she could give her baby a ride by hitching the big dog to a little wagon. Everything went along fine when suddenly the dog gave a jerk and away it went. The baby was thrown out but not hurt. Then Mrs. De Nova became worried about the dog for fear it might have pulled the wagon over itself, but it was found later in the Forest Preserve by Helen Heckenwallow, where the dog had pulled the wagon into the tree. Neither the dog nor the baby were harmed and neither had a long ride. Mr. and Mrs. Ira McCord are the proud parents of a son born July 1, 1923. Baby and mother are doing nicely.

Maud Lane of Western Springs spent a few day with Marjorie Trub

The Strength of the Pines

These were mountain men; and they had been in rifle duels before. They had the sure instincts of the beasts of prey in the hills without, and among other things they knew it wasn't wise to stand long in an open doorway with the firelight of the ruined pine behind them.

They slipped quickly into the darkness. Then they stopped and listened. The room was deeply silent. They couldn't hear the sound that both of them had so confidently expected—the faint breathing of a dying man. Simon struck a match. The room was quite deserted.

"What's up?" Bill demanded. Simon turned toward him with a scowl, and the match flickered and burned out in his fingers. "Keep your rifle ready. He may be hiding somewhere—still able to shoot."

They stole to the door of Linda's room and listened. Then they threw it wide.

One of their foes was in this room—an implacable foe whose eyes were glittering and strange in the matchlight. But it was neither Bruce nor Linda. It was old Elmira, cold and sinister as a rattler in its lair. Simon cursed her and hurried on.

Holding his rifle like a club, he swung through into Bruce's room, lighted another match, then darted into the kitchen. In the dim matchlight the truth went home to him.

He turned, eyes glittering. "They've gone—on Dave's horse," he said. "Thank God, they've only got one horse between 'em and can't go fast. You ride like h—l up the trail toward the store—they might have gone that way. Keep close watch and shoot when you can make 'em out."

"You mean—" Bill's eyes widened. "Mean! I mean do as I say. Shoot by sound, if you can't see 'em, and don't lose another second or I'll shoot you, too. Aim for the man if a chance offers—but shoot, anyway. Don't stop hunting till you find them—they'll duck off in the brush, sure. If they get through, everything is lost. I'll take the trail around the mountain."

They raced to their horses, untied them, and mounted swiftly. The darkness swallowed them at once.

CHAPTER XXIX

In the depth of gloom even the wild folk—usually keeping so close a watch on those that move on the shadowed trails—did not see Linda and Bruce ride past.

The darkness is usually their time of dominance, but tonight most of them had yielded to the storm and the snow. They hovered in their coverts. What movement there was among them was mostly toward the foothills; for the message had gone forth over the wilderness that the cold had come to stay. The little gnawing folk, emerging for another night's work at filling their larders with food, crept down into the scarcely less impenetrable darkness of their underground burrows. Even the bears, whose furry coats were impervious to any ordinary cold, felt the beginnings of the cold-trance creeping over them. They were remembering the security and warmth of their last winter's dens, and they began to long for them again.

The horse walked slowly, head near the ground. The girl made no effort to guide him. The lightning had all but ceased; and in an instant it had become apparent that only by trusting to the animal's instinct could the trail be kept at all; almost at once all sense of direction was lost to them. The snow and the darkness obscured the outline of the ridges against the sky; the trail was wholly invisible beneath them.

After the first hundred yards they had no way of knowing that the horse was actually on the trail. While animals in the light of day cannot see nearly so far or interpret nearly so clearly as human beings, they usually seem to make their way much better at night. Many a frontiersman has been saved from death by realization of this fact; and, bewildered by the ridges, has permitted his dog to lead him into camp. But nature has never devised a creature that can see in the utter darkness, and the gloom that enfolded them now seemed simply unfathomable. Bruce found it increasingly hard to believe that the horse's eyes could make out any kind of dim pathway in the pine needles. The feeling grew on him and on Linda as well, that they were lost and aimlessly wandering in the storm.

Of all the sensations that the wilderness can afford, there are few more dreadful to the spirit than this. It is never pleasant to lose one's bearings—and in the night and the cold and miles from any friendly habitation it is particularly hard to bear. Bruce felt the age-old menace of the wilderness as never before. It always seemed to be crouching, waiting to take a man at a disadvantage; and like the gods that first made mad those whom they would destroy, it doesn't quite play fair. He understood now certain wilderness tragedies of which he had heard; how tenderfoot—lost among the ridges—had broken into a wild run that had ended nowhere except in exhaustion and death.

Bruce himself felt a wild desire to lash his horse into a gallop, but he forced it back with all his powers of will. His calmer, saner self explained that folly with entire clearness. It would mean panic for the horse, and then a quick and certain death, either at the foot of a precipice or from a blow from a low-hanging limb. The horse seemed to be feeling its way, rather than seeing.

They were strange, lonely figures in the darkness; and for a long time they rode almost in silence. Then Bruce felt the girl's breath as she whispered.

"Bruce," she said. "Let's be brave and look this matter in the face. Do you think we've got a chance?"

He rode a long time before he answered. He groped desperately for a word that might bring her cheer, but it was hard to find. The cold seemed to deepen about them, the remorseless snow beat into his face.

"Linda," he replied, "it is one of the mercies of this world for men always to think that they've got a chance. Maybe it's only a cruelty in our case."

"I think I ought to tell you something else. I haven't the least way of knowing whether we are on the right trail."

"I knew that long ago. Whether we are on any trail at all."

"I've just been thinking. I don't know how many forks it has. We might have already got on a wrong one. Perhaps the horse is turned about and is heading back home—toward Simon's stables."

She spoke dully, and he thrust his arm back to her. "Linda, try to be brave," he urged. "We can only take a chance."

The horse plodded a few more steps. "Brave! To think that it is you that has to encourage me—instead of my trying to keep up your spirits. I will try to be brave, Bruce. And if we don't live through the night, my last remembrance will be of your bravery—how you, injured and weak from loss of blood, still remembered to give a cheery word to me."

"I'm not badly injured," he told her gently. "And there are certain things that have come clear to me lately. One of them is that except for you—throwing your own precious body between—I wouldn't be here at all."

The feeling that they had lost the trail grew upon them. Once they halted to adjust the blankets on the saddle, and they listened for any sounds that might indicate that Simon was overtaking them. But all they heard was the soft rustle of the leaves under the wind-blown snow.

"Linda," he asked suddenly. "Does it seem to you to be awfully cold?" She waited a long time before she spoke. This was not the hour to make quick answers. On any decision might rest their success or failure.

"I believe I can stand it—a while longer," she answered at last.

"But I don't think we'd better try to. It's getting cold. Every hour it's colder, and I seem to be getting weaker. It isn't a real wound, Linda—but it seems to have knocked some of my vitality out of me, and I'm dreadfully in need of rest. I think we'd better try to make a camp."

"And go on by morning light?"

"Yes."

"But Simon might overtake us then."

"We must stay out of sight of the trail. But somehow—I can't help but hope he won't try to follow us on such a night as this."

He drew up the horse, and they sat in the beat of the snow. "Don't make any mistake about that, Bruce," she told him. "Remember, that unless he overtakes us before we come into the protection of the courts, his whole fight is lost. It doesn't alone mean loss of the estate—for which he would risk his life just as he has a dozen times. It means defeat—a thing that would come hard to Simon. Besides, he's got a fire within him that will keep him warm."

"You mean—hatred?"

"Hated. Nothing else."

"But in spite of it we must make camp. We'll get off the trail—if we're still on it—and try to slip through tomorrow. You see what's going to happen if we keep on going this way?"

"I know that I feel a queer dread—and hopelessness—"

"And that dread and hopelessness are just as much danger signals as the sound of Simon's horse behind us. It means that the cold and the snow and the fear are getting the better of us. Linda, it's a race with death. Don't misunderstand me or disbelieve me. It isn't Simon alone now. It's the cold and the snow and the fear. The thing to do is to make camp, keep as warm as we can in our blankets, and push on in the morning. It's two full day's ride, going fast, the best we can go—and God knows what will happen before the end."

"Then turn off the trail, Bruce," the girl told him.

"I don't know that we're even on the trail."

"Turn off, anyway. As long as we stay together—it doesn't matter."

She spoke very quietly. Then he felt a strange thing. A warmth which even that growing, terrible cold could not transcend swept over him. For her arms had crept out under his arms and encircled his great breast, then pressed with all her gentle strength.

No word of encouragement, no cheery expression of hope could have meant so much. Not defeat, not even the long darkness of death itself could appall him now. All that he had given and suffered and endured, all the mighty effort that he had made had in an instant been shown in its true light, a thing worth while, a sacrifice atoned for and redeemed.

They headed off into the thickets, blindly, letting the horse choose the way. They felt him turn to avoid some object in his path—evidently a fallen tree—and they mounted a slight ridge or rise. Then they felt the wet touch of fir branches against their cheeks.

Bruce stopped the horse and both dismounted. Both of them knew that under the drooping limbs of the tree they would find, at least until the snows deepened, comparative shelter from the storm. Here, rolled in their blankets, they might pass the remainder of the night hours.

Bruce tied the horse, and the girl unrolled the blankets. But she did not lay them together to make a rude bed—and the dictates of conventionality had nothing whatever to do with it. If one got more warmth could have been achieved by it, these two would have lain side by side through the night hours between the same blankets. She knew, however, that more warmth could be achieved if each of them took a blanket and rolled up in it; thus they would get two thicknesses instead of one and no openings to admit the freezing air. When this was done they lay side by side, economizing the last atom of warmth.

The night hours were dreary and long. The rain beat into the limbs above them, and sometimes it sifted through. At the first gray of dawn Bruce opened his eyes.

His dreams had been troubled and strange, but the reality to which he awakened gave him no sense of relief. He fought a little battle, lying there under the snow-covered limbs of the fir tree. Because it was one in which no blows were exchanged, no shots fired, and no muscles called into action, it was no less a battle, trying and stern. It was a fight waged in his own spirit, and it seemed to rend him in twain.

The whole issue was clear in his mind at once. The cold had deepened in these hours of dawn, and he was slowly, steadily freezing to death. Even now the blood flowed less swiftly in his veins. Death itself, in the moment, had lost all horror for him; rather it was a thing of peace, of ease. All he had to do was to lie still. Just close his eyes—and soft shadows would drop over him.

They would drop over Linda too. She lay still beside him; perhaps they had already fallen. The war he had waged so long and so relentlessly would end in blissful calm. Outside there was only snow and cold and wracking limbs and pain, only further conflict with tireless enemies, only struggle to tear his agonized body to pieces; and the bitterness of defeat in the end. He saw his chances plain as he lay beneath that gray sky. Even now, perhaps, Simon was upon them. Only two little rifle shells remained with which to combat him, and he doubted that his wounded arm would hold the rifle steady. There were weary, innumerable miles between them and any shelter, and only the terrible, trackless forest lay between.

Then why not lie still and let the curtains fall? This was an easy, tranquil passing, and heaven alone knew what dreadful mode of egress would be his if he rose to battle further. All the argument seemed on one side.

But high and bright above all this burned the indomitable flame of his spirit. To rise, to fight, to struggle on. Never to yield until the Power above decreed! To stand firm, even as the pines themselves. The dominant greatness that Linda had found in this man rose in him, and he set his muscles like iron.

He shook off the mists of the frost in his brain. Quickly he knelt by Linda and shook her shoulders in his hands. She opened her eyes.

"Get up, Linda," he said gently. "We have to go on."

She started to object, but a message in his eyes kept her from it. His own spirit went into her. He helped her to her feet.

"Help me roll the blankets," he commanded, "and take out enough food for breakfast. We can't stop to eat it here. I think we're in sight of the main trail; whether we can find it—in the snow—I don't know. We must get farther into the thickets before we stop to eat."

They were strange figures in the snow flurries as they went to work to roll the blankets into a compact bundle. The food she had taken from their stores for breakfast he thrust into the pocket of his coat; the rest, with the blankets, she tied swiftly on the horse. They unfastened the animal and for a moment she stood holding the reins while Bruce crept back on the hillside to look for the trail.

The snow swept round them, and they felt the lowering menace of the cold. And at that instant those dread spirits that rule the wilderness, jealous then and jealous still of the intrusion of man, dealt them a final, deadly blow.

Its weapon was just a sound—a loud crash in a distant thicket—and a pungent message on the wind that their human senses were too blunt to receive. The horse suddenly snorted loudly, then reared up. Bruce saw as in a tragic dream the girl struggle to hold him; he saw her pulled down into the snow and the rein jerked from her hand. Then the animal plunged, wheeled and raced at top speed away into the snow flurries. Some terror that as yet they could not name had broken their control of him and in an instant taken from them this one last hope of safety.

CHAPTER XXX

Bruce walked over to Linda, waiting in the snow on her knees. It was not an intentional posture. She had been jerked down by the plunging horse, and she had not yet completely risen. But the sight of her slight figure, her raised white face, her clasped hands, and the remorseless snow of the wilderness about her moved Bruce to his depths.

He saw her but dimly in the snow flurries, and she looked as if she were in an attitude of prayer. He came rather slowly, and he even smiled a little. And she gave him a wan, strange little smile in return.

"We're down to cases at last," he said, with a rather startling quietness of tone. "You see what it means?"

She nodded, then got to her feet. "We can walk out, if we are let alone and given time; it isn't that we are obliged to have the horse. But our blankets are on its back, and this storm is steadily becoming a blizzard. And you see—time is one thing that we don't have. No human being can stand this cold for long unprotected."

"And we can't keep going—keep warm by walking?"

His answer was to take out his knife and put the point of the steel to his thumb nail. His eyes strained, then looked up. "A little way," he answered, "but we can't keep our main directions. The sun doesn't even cast a shadow on my nail to show us which is west. We could keep up a while, perhaps, but there is no end to this wilderness and at noon or tonight—the result would be the same."

"It means—the end?"

"If I can't catch the horse, I'm going now. If we can regain the blankets—by getting in rifle range of the horse—we might make some sort of shelter in the snow and last out until we can see our way and get our bearings. You don't know of any shelter—any cave or cabin where we might build a fire?"

"No. There are some in the hills, but we can't see our way to find them."

"I know. I should have thought of that. And you see, we can't build a fire here—everything is wet, and the snow is beginning to whirl so we couldn't keep it going. If we should stagger on all day in this storm and this snow, we couldn't endure the night." He smiled again. "And I want you to climb a tree—and stay there—until I come back."

She looked at him dully. "What's the use, Bruce? You won't come back. You'll chase the thing until you die—I know you. You don't know when to give up. And if you want to come back—you couldn't find the way. I'm going with you."

"No." Once more she started to disobey, but the grave displeasure in his eyes restrained her. "It's going to take all my strength to fight through that snow—I must go fast—and maybe life and death will have to depend on your strength at the end of the trail. You must save it—the little you have left. Since I must take the rifle—to shoot the horse if I can't catch him—you must climb a tree. You know why."

"Partly to hide from Simon if he comes this way. And partly—"

"Because there's some danger in that thicket beyond!" he interrupted her. "The horse's terror was real—besides, you heard the sound. It might be only a puma. But it might be the Killer. Swing your arms and struggle all you can to keep the blood flowing. I won't be gone long."

He started to go, and she ran after him with outstretched arms. "Oh,

"Oh, Bruce," She Cried, "Come Back Soon—Soon. Don't Leave Me to Die Alone."

Bruce," she cried, "come back soon—soon. Don't leave me to die alone. I'm not strong enough for that."

He whirled, took two paces back, and his arms went about her. He had forgotten his injury long since. He kissed her cool lips and smiled into her eyes. Then at once the flurries hid him.

The girl climbed up into the branches of a fir tree. In the thicket beyond a great gray form tacked back and forth, trying to locate a scent that a second before he had caught but dimly and had lost. It was the Killer, and his temper was lost long ago in the whirling snow.

His anger was upon him, partly from the discomfort of the storm, partly from the constant, gnawing pain of three bullet wounds in his powerful body. Besides, he realized the presence of his old and greatest enemy—those still, slight forms that had crossed him so many times, that had stung him with their bullets, and whose weakness he had learned.

And then all at once he caught the scent plain. He lurched forward, crashed again through the brush, and walked out into the snow-swept open. Linda saw his vague outline, and at first she hung perfectly motionless, hoping to escape his gaze. She had been told many times that grizzlies cannot climb, yet she had no desire to see him raging below her, reaching, possibly trying to shake her from the limb.

He didn't seem to see her. His eyes were lowered; besides, it was never the grizzly way to search the branches of a tree. The wind blew the message that he might have read clearly in the opposite direction. She saw him walk slowly across the snow, head lowered, a huge gray ghost in the snow flurries not one hundred feet distant. Then she saw him pause, with lowered head.

In the little second before the truth came to her, the bear had already turned. Bruce's tracks were somewhat dimmed by the snow, but the Killer interpreted them truly. She saw too late that he had crossed them, read their message, and now had turned into the clouds of snow to trace them down.

For an instant she gazed at him in speechless horror; and already the flurries had almost obscured his gray figure. Desperately she tried to call his attention from the tracks. She called, then she rustled the branches as loudly as she could. But the noise of the wind obscured what sound she made, and the bear was already too absorbed in the hunt to turn and see her. As always, in the nearing presence of a foe, his rage grew upon him.

Sobbing, Linda swung down from the tree. She had no conscious plan of aid to her lover. She only had a blind instinct to seek him, to try to warn him of his danger, and at least to be with him at the death. The great tracks of the Killer, seemingly almost as long as her own arm, made a plain trail for her to follow. She too struck off into the storm-swept canyon.

And the forest gods who dwell somewhere in the region where the pine tops taper into the sky, and who pull the strings that drop and raise the curtain and work the puppets that are the players of the wilderness dramas, saw a chance for a great and tragic jest in this strange chase over the snow. The destinies of Bruce, Linda and the Killer were already converging on this trail that all three followed—the path that the runaway horse made in the snow. Only one of the great forces of the war that had been waged at Trail's End was lacking, and now he came also.

Simon Turner had ridden late into the night and from before dawn; with remorseless fury he had goaded on his exhausted horse, he had driven him with unflinching strength through coverts, over great rocks, down into rocky canyons in search of Bruce and Linda, and now, as the dawn broke he thought that he had found them. He had suddenly come upon the tracks of Bruce's horse in the snow.

If he had encountered them farther back, when the animal had been running wildly, he might have guessed the truth and rejoiced. No man would attempt to ride a horse at a gallop through that trailless stretch. But at the point he found the tracks most of the horse's terror had been spent, and it was walking leisurely, sometimes lowering its head to crop off the shrubbery. The trail was comparatively fresh, too; or else the fast-falling snow would have already obscured it. He thought that his hour of triumph was near.

But it had come none too soon. And Simon—out of passion-filled eyes—looked and saw that it would likely bring death with it.

He realized his position fully. The storm was steadily developing into one of those terrible mountain blizzards in which, without shelter, no human being might live. He was far from his home, he had no blankets and he could not find his way. Yet he would not have turned back if he could. The securing of the document by which Bruce could take the great estates from him was only a trifle now. He believed wholly within his own soul that the wilderness—without his aid—would do his work of hatred for him; and that by no conceivable circumstances could Bruce and Linda find shelter from the blizzard and live through the day. He could find their bodies in the spring if he by any chance escaped himself, and take the Ross-Folger agreement from them. But it was not enough. He wanted also to do the work of destruction.

Even his own death—if it were only delayed until his vengeance was wreaked—could not matter now. In all the ancient strife and fury and ceaseless war of the wild through which he had come, there was no passion to equal this. The Killer was content to let the wolf kill the fawn for him. The cougar will turn from its warm, newly slain prey, in which its white fangs have already dipped, at the sight of some great danger in the thickets. But Simon could not turn. Death lowered its wings upon him as well as upon his enemy, yet the fire in his heart and the fury in his brain shut out all thought of it.

He sprang off his horse better to examine the tracks, and then stood, half bent over, in the snow.

Bruce Folger headed swiftly up the trail that his runaway horse had made. It was, he thought, his last effort, and he gave his full strength to it. Weakened as he was by the cold and the wound, he could not have made headway at all except for the fact that the wind was behind him.

The snow ever fell faster, in larger flakes, and the track dimmed before his eyes. It was a losing game. Terrified not only by the beast that had stirred in the thicket but by the ever-increasing wind as well, the animal would not linger to be overtaken. Bruce had not ridden it enough to have tamed it, and his plan was to attempt to shoot the creature on sight, rather than try to catch it. They could not go forward, anyway, as long as the blizzard lasted. Which way was east and which was west he could no longer guess. And with the blankets they might make some sort of shelter and keep life in their bodies until the snow ceased and they could find their way.

The cold was deepening, the storm was increasing in fury. Bruce's bones ached, his wounded arm felt numb and strange, the frost was getting into his lungs. There was no hope of the storm decreasing, rather it was steadily growing worse. The tracks grew more dim, and he began to be afraid that the falling flakes would obscure his own footprints so that he could not find his way back to Linda. And he knew, beyond all other knowledge, that he wanted her with him when the shadows dropped down for good and all. He wanted her arms about him; the fight would be easier then.

"Oh, what's the use?" he suddenly said to the wind. "Why not give up and go back?"

He halted in the trail and started to turn. But at that instant a banner of wind swept down into his face, and the eddy of snow in front of him was brushed from his gaze. Just for the space of a breath the canyon for a hundred feet distant was partially cleared of the blinding streamers of snow. And he uttered a long gasp when he saw, thirty yards distant and at the farthest reaches of his sight, the figure of a saddled horse.

His gun leaped to his shoulder, yet his eagerness did not quiet him his self-control. He gazed quietly along the sights until he saw the animal's shoulder between them. His finger pressed back against the trigger.

The horse rocked down, seemingly instantly killed, and the snow swept in between. Bruce cried out in triumph. Then he broke into a run and sped through the flurries toward his dead.

You read of such cases occasionally. Sometimes memory is restored by a blow such as falling on one's head. A rare malady, and most of us consider it strange. We take for granted voluntary amnesia, the common phenomenon in which people forget such things as their debts and benefactors. House-Building Projects

By REV. H. OSTROM, D. D.
Extension Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—Ye run every man to his own house.—Haggai 1:3.

That the order of house-building needs regulation is evident from the history of the Jewish people. When, with royal permission from Cyrus, they returned to their homeland, building formed the larger part of their immediate enterprise. God's house (the temple) stood in ruins. But instead of turning their united labors to this, each one builded busily on his own dwelling. The temple was the one building that represented to them and to the people about them, even to their bitterest enemies, God, the living God. He was their God. He had protected them and brought them back home. But His house they subordinated to their own—"they ran every man to his own house."

Substitutes.
Did they build? Yes, but they built substitutes. They did not put first things first. The temple stood in ruins; yet with meticulous care they fashioned even the ceilings of their own houses. With us today, it may be that we crowd Christ out by substituting the better for the best. Like those ancient people, we could readily present the plea that we do not build brothels or saloons; we build houses, a task made attractive by domestic fondness and interest. The enterprise is humanitarian, surely? But the claim, "God first," cannot be hidden behind this. We cannot deny that we are rejecting it. When we so build houses that we must refuse to recognize God, the effort becomes idolatrous. And fine taste and skill in the design of an idol cannot possibly make it less a thing of idolatry.

Self-Protection.
Self-protection was pleaded by this disobedient people to justify their conduct. A man among them was determined to build his own house even if there were no temple. It is on the basis of self-protection that men argue today for objectionable customs and pleasures in the home that crowd out family prayers and such customs as show reverence for God's name and regard for His protection. Must not this way of living be allowed in the interest of the opinions of business associates or of society friends? Really, God through Haggai is proceeding against the goddess home. And that spells God's protection for those who will heed duty, and not advance the excuse of self-protection.

Fashion.
From the statement "Every man ran to his own house," it would appear that it was "all the style" to do so. When the devil cannot get a man to count God out by direct personal decision, he may succeed by indirect appeal to him through his social nature. Though the man would refuse to alone do it, he may "go with the multitude to do evil." Men cannot afford to forget, however, that "the fashion of this world passeth away." What right have you or I to adopt "the style" until it has first been examined as to whether it pleases God?

How eager they were! They must push the house-building project. Notice, "ye run"! There was zeal! Industry! Thrift! Prosperity? No, we cannot say it. They substituted "the zeal of my house" for "the zeal of thy house." How hard people will work for such poor wages! As they themselves say, "They will work themselves to death." Is it not all in a good cause? they ask. Halt soul, and answer, "Whose cause?" Never, never can we do enough to save us. What Jesus Christ did on the cross must be accepted and then the really good cause begins. Then we can speed the industry of home building. When we have started with the temple we can proceed with the house.

Consecration.
Better live in a tent of coarse weaving where God is revered, than live in a house as artistic as it is costly where God's claim is neglected. If you really have God but live in a hut you can say: "Yet possessing all things." You may live in a prison dungeon, and lo, you yourself may become a temple of the Holy Spirit. There is a house "which is from heaven."

A Prayer.
Dear Master, we will follow Thee, but we need Thy grace to hold us from falling by the way. Let us plant our feet where Thou hast marked the way. O our Good Shepherd, for so we shall not wander. Only let us hear Thee call our names and then we cannot miss the path. Amen.—The Church Helper.

The Only Savior.
The Person of Christ will ever remain an unsolved mystery to thought, but He will ever be the only Savior of humanity, and He will still satisfy all who seek God in humility. The believer must be content with seeing in a glass darkly until the Savior is seen face to face.—The Church of Ireland Gazette.

The man who designed the faces of the large clocks in the tower of the Federal building was a practical man who believed in leaving out all the unessentials. The dials of the clocks have no numerals on them. The hands point to white lines where the numerals ought to be. Attention was called to this fact by the recent cleaning and painting given the clocks' hands and faces.—Detroit News.

A FEELING OF SECURITY

You naturally feel secure when you know that the medicine you are about to take is absolutely pure and contains no harmful or habit producing drugs.

Such a medicine is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, kidney, liver and bladder remedy. The same standard of purity, strength and excellence is maintained in every bottle of Swamp-Root.

It is scientifically compounded from vegetable herbs.

It is not a stimulant and is taken in teaspoonful doses.

It is not recommended for everything.

It is nature's great helper in relieving and overcoming kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

A sworn statement of purity is with every bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

If you need a medicine, you should have the best. On sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large. However, if you wish first to try this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

FRANCE DEFIANT ON WAR DEBT

Paris Warns Great Britain Upon Proposed New Ruhr Deal.

U. S. INCLUDED IN THREAT

Poincare Declares the Nation Will Not Tolerate International Reparations Board on Basis Suggested by Secretary Hughes.

Paris, July 12.—France issued a warning to Great Britain and the rest of the world that she will tolerate no attempt to settle the German reparation question through any other agency than the reparation commission.

The warning, issued in an interview by a high foreign office official, followed definite word that Prime Minister Baldwin, in his speech in the house of commons will accept Germany's proposal that the allies accede to Secretary Hughes' suggestion that reparations be fixed by an international commission of economic experts.

Inasmuch as semi-official advices indicate that the United States will join Britain in her new policy, the French warning must be regarded as directed in part at the United States.

"France insists on her legal rights," said the foreign office official, who had been delegated by Premier Poincare to give the interview. "Under the Versailles treaty, the reparation commission and no one else, has authority over reparations. If any other nation or nations sets up any other agency to usurp the reparation commission's authority, France will take measures to prevent the effectiveness of such action."

"There is no question that the British action means a break between Britain and France. Then what becomes of the league of nations? For the basis of the league is allied solidarity, and if there is no solidarity the league must fade away."

Angry Rancher Tears Up Track; Blocks Railroad

Helena, Mont., July 12.—Complaint was made to United States District Attorney Slattery by the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Railway company that Elmer Thompson, a rancher, four miles east of White Tail, Daniels county, had torn up sixty feet of the company's railroad track and built or moved a shack into the gap, where he is holding forth, heavily armed.

Doors of Third Bank Looked as Fight Aftermath

Helena, Mont., July 12.—The First State bank of Joplin, Mont., affiliated with the Stanton Trust and Savings bank of Great Falls, has closed its doors, it was disclosed by L. J. Skelton, state bank examiner. The closing of the First State bank of Shelby, another institution affiliated with the Stanton bank, already had been announced.

Five Die as Indiana Auto Stalls in Center of Track

Terre Haute, Ind., July 12.—Five persons were instantly killed and two injured when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a Big Four passenger train at the Coal Bluff crossing. The dead are Mr. and Mrs. Jack Ellis and their daughter, Lilly, of West Terre Haute, and Margaret and Ernestine Dunlap of Seelyeville.

French Warships Circle World to Sell Corsets

Paris, July 12.—The French cruisers Jules Michelet and Victor Hugo, which have been on a 32,000-mile cruise around the world during the last nine months with a stunning exposition of Parisian corsets, perfumes, gowns, jewelry, hats and stockings, returned to Toulon Wednesday.

Paraguay Rebels Beaten at Gates of Asuncion

Buenos Aires, July 12.—Revolutionists attacked Asuncion, capital of Paraguay, about noon Monday. The fighting lasted until Tuesday afternoon, when the revolutionists were put to flight by government troops. Seventy were killed and 100 wounded in the battle.

Three Guardsmen Killed, Ten Hurt by Bolt of Lightning

Baltimore, Md., July 12.—Three members of the Fifth regiment, Maryland National Guard, in camp at Saunders range, Ann Arundel county, were killed when lightning struck in a group of men. Ten soldiers were injured.

J. P. Morgan Buys Estate.

New York, July 12.—As a gift for his son, Henry S. Morgan, and his recent bride, formerly Miss Catherine Adams of Boston, J. P. Morgan has bought a 14-acre estate at Locust Valley, near the Piping Rock club.

Bank Cashier Short $110,000.

Petersburg, Va., July 12.—The National Bank of Hopewell, Va., failed to open. Henry J. Watkins, its president, said the bank's closure was due to a shortage of $110,000 in the accounts of R. L. Shelby, the cashier.

Reclaimed Italian Marshes.

Seven tons of rice per hectare is the record average yield from what was until a short time ago worthless, unhealthy marsh lands just south of Rome. Wheat, barley, beets, alfalfa, tomatoes and flax are grown on land reclaimed by filling and drainage, and the former marsh lands support a tomato canner, where 120 tons of tomatoes are concentrated every day. American Consul Leon Dominian, Rome, informs the Department of Commerce. Over six thousand acres of land have already been brought into usefulness.

Blueberries an Inch Thick.

A blueberry an inch in diameter is not a dream, but a possibility. At the United States Department of Agriculture testing plantation at Whitesboro, four miles east from Brown Mills, N. J., about 25,000 blueberry hybrids have now been fruited. Many of them, according to the Scientific American, have produced berries three-fourths of an inch in diameter, several four-fifths of an inch and one of them this year reached almost seven-eighths of an inch.

Personal Hygiene

EVERY well-informed physician is opposed to the use of poisonous, burning and irritating solutions for personal hygiene. This is an indisputable fact.

Zonite may be used frequently at great germicidal strength on sensitive membrane and tissues without the slightest danger or harmful effect.

Zonite is non-poisonous and non-irritating. It has greater germ killing power than pure carbolic acid and has more than seventy-five times the germ killing power of peroxide.

"Mend your speech a little, Lest it may mar your fortunes"

-Shakespeare

WE are anxious to aid our patrons in getting the most out of their telephone service. Through long observation and experience we have learned that following certain simple practices will give the best results in using the telephone.

Speak clearly, not too rapidly, with lips close to, but not touching, the telephone mouthpiece.

Do not attempt to remember numbers. Consult the telephone directory. This will avoid calling some one not wanted, which might annoy both the other person and yourself.

If the telephone you are calling is reported busy, hang up your receiver and try again in a few minutes. Do not jiggle the receiver hook. If you wish to recall the operator, move the hook up and down slowly a few times.

If your telephone is out of order, report it promptly and we will restore the service as quickly as possible. Go to another telephone or public pay station and call "Repair Clerk." This call is free.

If you are on a party line, remember that the nature of this service requires mutual accommodations between the several users.

If these suggestions are followed, the service to all users will be better.

A Greater Touring Car Value

The present price of the Ford Touring Car is the lowest ever made.

And yet the car itself is a greater value. It is better looking with slanting windshield, a one-man top and improved seats. And there are many refinements in chassis construction.

The demand is so great that deliveries will soon be impossible. To protect yourself, order now. Make a small down payment, the balance on easy terms.

Ford prices have never been so low Ford quality has never been so high
